Recession Busters!

Track down your missing money!

Almost $42 billion in unclaimed property is in forgotten safe deposit boxes, bonds, bank accounts and more, says the National Association of Unclaimed Property Administrators. That means there could be a bundle with your name on it—here's how to find it!

1 Give the government a run for your money!

Maybe you moved around when the IRS sent out tax refunds. Or you had some money in a bank that went bust. What about those savings bonds you put away for safekeeping years ago? It all still belongs to you, and you can get your hands on it by visiting USA.gov/Citizen/Topics/Government-Unclaimed-Money.shtml. The site contains handy links to all the places the government could be holding on to your cash!

2 Cash in on class-action suits!

Get a robocall from Wells Fargo Bank between November 1, 2009, and September 17, 2014? Buy Arm & Hammer Essentials Deodorant? If so, you could be eligible to recover money as part of a class-action lawsuit. There are thousands of them, and odds are you're eligible for several! Go to ClassActionRebates.com and TopClassActions.com, which list open suits, help you assess your eligibility and supply the claim forms.

3 Catch up with old 401(k)s!

If you have a few jobs under your belt (the average American has seven!), odds are you've participated in a few 401(k) plans. And if you've left the funds behind—something 50% of us have done—it can be easy to lose track of them. To the rescue: National Registry of Unclaimed Retirement Benefits (UnclaimedRetirementBenefits.com). Just plug your Social Security number into the free site's secure search engine, and it will comb its database for results.

4 Collect on life insurance!

Life insurance companies are one of the biggest holders of unclaimed assets. The reason: It's up to beneficiaries to notify the companies of a policyholder's death, but that's next to impossible if an heir doesn't know she's named as a beneficiary or even that a policy exists! The good news: Often, the policies accrue interest while they are just sitting there, so when you do locate your inheritance, you'll get the full payout and then some! Just go to LostLifeInsurancePolicy.com and fill out the secure form to find out how much Great-Uncle Otis left you!

The direct deposit switch that makes cents!

Have your employer deposit your paycheck into your savings account—not checking! Then transfer a set monthly allowance to your checking. That way, saving comes first, and you'll get a better handle on your budget!
